in Five Months

Nearly 5,000,000 players participated in various snorts throughout the A.E.P. under the guidance of athletic directors of the Y.M.C.A. between August 1, 1918, and January 1, 1919, according to figures com-piled by the Department of Athletics and pied by the Department of Athletics and given out resterday. In addition, over 5,000,000 soldiers watched the games. Most of these activities were the result of volunteer effect on the part of the soldiers, as it was not until after the armstice that the Army otherally adopted an athletic pro-eram.

the Army oftently adopted an athletic program.

The "setting up" drills conducted by Y.M.C.A. athletic directors were entirely voluntary and in addition to the "setting up" exercises conducted by the Army.

That nothing—not even unfavorable weather conditions and the absence of appropriate playing fields—can keep the great game of basebull from leading all other sports is impressively shown by the figures. What is termed "indoor basebull" is really playground ball, played outdoors with a large ball and a small but on a small field with indoor rules.

Taking the grand total of nearly 14,000,000 players and spectators combined, it is seen that the equivalent of the entire A.E.F. seven times over was reached in some form of athletic activity in the short period of five months.

American Team Should Be Strong Contender With Duncan, Caddock and Thomson

World's champion athletes, past and present, will compete with new stars in the athletic fromament at Joinville-le-Pont, near Paris, next June, when the greatest military games in history will be conducted under the auspices of the Inter-Allied Games Committee.

The broad rule adopted by the Games Committee defining the elighbility of contextants opens the meet to "any officer or soldier who has at any time between August 4, 1911, and November 11, 1918, been a member of the military forces of any of the 21 Allied nations," and insures the keenest competition ever staged on track and field anywhere.

British Have Three Good Men

But the United States is not the only nation which will be represented by athletes of known oblidity. Great Britain has two stars of the cluder path who should make the American contenders hustle. They are Lieut. Col. A. N. S. Jackson, winner of the 1.500 meter run at Stockholm in 1912, and R. E. Wilker, of South Africa, winner of the 100-meter run at London in 1908. Another athlete who should seer is Lieut. B. C. (dock) Harrley, secretary of the British Army Sport Control Board.

Dyer, chairman of the Athlette Council at Camp Fontanezen, Brest, with the aid of the Y.M.C.A., K. of C. and Red Cross, has the A.E.F. athlette program running like clockwork, and sport has taken the camp by storm.

A boxing tournament to determine winners in the various classes who will later compete in the S.O.S. finals for A.E.F. laurels opened Tuesday, when 3,000 persons jammed their way into the Y.M.C.A. auditorium. Instead of beginning the topranament with matches in the bautamweight dass, the process was reversed, the heavy-weights opening hostifities. The following light 11 bours were staged in the first tound of the middleweight and welterweight classes.

More than any others, perhaps, the men of the Army of Occupation welcomed the athlete program that G.H.Q. has made a part—and the pleasantest part—of the Army's daily routine. Unlike the S.G.S., the valley of the Rhine gives solutions for correction, and diers few opportunities for recreation, and for drilling only, and fatigue, and mess and sleep. The natives are amused and often amazed at the feats of the eager young soldiers who take keen plensure in games that to five selectators seem just rough unclease whiching the soldiers serimonizing in football practice or playing bareball. Boxing and wrestling also interest the natives, and many of the younger generation baxe alopted the American fistic sport. Undoubtedly, when the Army of Occupations goes horne it will leave behind it customs and ways Denischland never knew hefere. Among the new things the Germans have learned from the men living in their towns is clean, vigorous sport, faster and more thrilling than any the Verbin societies over taught.

Sports at Antweller

Members of the 11th Machine Gun Battallein, 4th Division, stationed at Antweller, are devoting most of their time to developing glove material. They have a bost of elever milit wielders whom they are willing to back against the entire A.E.P. at their respective weights. Among those are Knockout Relitz, of Detroit, Mich. (156 pounds); Kiid Wishart, of Gamesville.
